Poetry.

A MOTHER'S GRIEF.

To mark the suffering of the babe
That cannot speak its wo;
To see the infant's tears gush forth,
Yet know not why they flow;
To meet the meek, uplifted eye,
That fain would ask relief;
Yet can but tell of agony—
This is a mother's grief.

Through dreary days, and darker nights,
To trace the march of death;
To hear the faint and frequent sigh,
The quick and shortened breath;
To watch the last dread strife draw near,
And pray that struggle brief;
Though all is ended with its close—
This is a mother's grief.

To see in one short hour decay'd
The hope of future years;
To feel how vain a father's prayers,
How vain a mother's tears:
To think the cold grave now must close
O'er what was once the chief
Of all the treasured joys of earth—
This is a mother's grief.

Yet when the first wild throb is past,
Of anguish and despair,
To lift the eye of faith to Heaven,
And think—my child is there;
This best can dry the gushing tears,
This gives the heart relief;
Until the Christian's pious hope
O'ercomes a mother's grief.

Miscellany.

There has recently been published in London, a Romance, in three volumes, called "Oldcourt." It is a tale of more than half a century past. From this novel we make a selection which, while it exhibits the writer's powers, pictured forth, in glowing colors, one of those Duels which, somewhere about the middle of the last century, were occasionally fought among the gentry of Ireland. Dem Press.

AN IRISH DUEL OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

"They fought on the Curragh of Kildare, in the presence of five hundred spectators. * * *

"It was a glorious morning in September; the sun shining strong, but the air rather cold. Bateman, who was the first man that ever put a pistol into my hand, asked me to go with him to the ground, merely as he said, that I might see the sport. * * *

"They were old stagers, prime shots, and game to the back bone. Of the two, however, Kilgobbin was the most famed for the pistol; and had never gone out, without knocking down, or at least winging his man. They well knew each other's powers, and that made them less disposed to an accommodation, which migh be attributed to wrong motives. Berides, from the nature of the quarrel, as it was taken up by the appellant, it could not but have a serious result to one, or both of the parties.

"The knight was a rough, rather coarse, ruddy complexioned man, about forty, with a scar under his eye, which he got in a scuffle with a cavalry officer, in the pump-room, at Bath. Beau Bateman, as he was callad, from his peculiar style of dress, was a tall, handsome fellow, evidently younger than his antagonist, full of gaiety and good humor, and remarkable for that propensity to joke, which is so much the characteristic of our countrymen.

"I eagerly observed his countenance when we met in the morning, but all was calm and steady; his eagle eye as bright and brisk as ever; he was even more talkative and jocular than usual. He had been particularly attentive to his dress, which was always in the extreme of the fashion; and, in short, he manifested in his whole demeanor such a perfect sangfroid, that had it not been for a slight tremor of the upper lip, when turning aside to me, he told me, in case of accident, to give his pistols to his nephew—a chum of mine in college (who, by-the-by, was afterwards the first man I wounded with these pistols;) had it not been, I say, for this slight tremor, and a pressure of the hand with which he accompanied his directions, nobody would have supposed that he was about to present himself as a target to the best shot in Ireland. * * *

"On arriving at the ground, we saw the knight and his party in conversation, and a number of persons scattered about at a distance.

"Bateman, politely lifting his hat, said, 'good morning, gentlemen; I hope we have not kept you waiting.' French answered, 'By no means, we were before our time.'—Kilgobbin, in a rather ungracious way, replied to his adversary's salutation, 'Sir, your most obedient.' The other shook him cordially by the hand, for his peculiar manners had made him a general favorite.

"The seconds were now about to measure the distance—nine paces, when Kilgobbin remarked, that we were in the view of some cabins on the right. This seemed an odd objection, as there was no interruption to be apprehended from such a quarter, and many of their inhabitants were collected round to see the sport. He suggested, however, that we should remove about a quarter of a mile further, to a fine level turf, on the banks of a pond called Brown's hole, from the name of a fool who thought fit to jump in.

"All this time, Bateman was as gay and agreeable as ever, cracking his jokes, and sometimes pleasantly pointing them at the sulky air of adversary, declaring 'he saw no reason why old friends should not shoot each other in good humor, when their honor required that they should resort to such a ceremony.'

"By the time we had reached the spot, and the ground was measured out, the spectators had become so numerous, that it was necessary to appoint two gentlemen to keep the lines, as it were, and warn the lookers on out of the range of the bullets. * * *

"Kilgobbin, I perceived, had, during the arrangement, so manœuvred, as to get at that side which would enable him to stand with his back to the sun. Every thing was now nearly ready, the pistols loaded, the flints examined, and the seconds settling apart the order of proceeding; when, to my surprise, the knight took off his coat and gave it to his servant to hold, then baring his right arm up to the elbow, and stepping a few paces to the side of the pond, deliberately plunged it into the water; and held it there.

"'Good God!' exclaimed D'Arcy, 'what a vindictive spirit that displayed.'

"As we proceeded, I occasionally observed the knight's countenance, and I thought he appeared to be flushed, eager, and somewhat restless; looked roun I frequently with an unquiet eye, and paying only a sort of yawning attention to what was said to him.

"'So it was felt, I assure you,' replied O'Hara; and a murmur of disapprobation ran through the whole party. The knight, however, was not influenced, though he seemed mortified by the manifestation of feeling which had broken forth; and Bateman observing him, exclaimed, in a laughing tone, 'What knight, are you nervous?'

"'Yes,' answered Kilgobbin, sneeringly; 'you frighten me, and a cool hand is a good safeguard.'

"'A cool head is better,' replied Bateman.

"'A cold heart may make it so, Mr. Bateman,' retorted the knight; 'and I leave you all the benefit that is to be derived from it.'

"Here one of the country people, standing near with a small bottle of the 'native' in his hand, to comfort him in the freshness of the morning, conceiving, I suppose, that Kilgobbin was complaining of the coldness of the heart, which he concluded was a very unlucky feeling at such a moment, with equal simplicity and good nature said,—

"'Ah, then, may be your honor would take a drop of a dram.'

"'How can he, my good fellow,' said Bateman; don't you see he is out of spirits this morning?'

"This sally produced a general laugh, notwithstanding the seriousness of the occasion; for Pat, you know, can't resist a joke, even when the rope is about his neck. The knight looked like thunder, and his old croney, Col. Cavanagh, turning to Bateman, exclaimed 'Well, Beau, I will do you the justice to say, that you are as ready with your pun or your pistol, as any man that ever stepped on the Curragh of Kildare!' * * *

"As challenger, the knight was to have the first shot, the signal was given, and he fired without effect. Bateman now received the word, and instantly discharged his pistol, the ball striking the ground at his antagonist's feet. The seconds now delivered another pistol to each, the groupes around hardly breathing, so absorbed in the interest of the scene.

"Again the word was given, and, at the same moment, Bateman's second cried out to the knight, 'Stop, sir, you have advanced a pace on your ground.' Kilgobbin, in drawing back, said, 'I beg pardon, I was not aware of it.' Somebody amongst the spectators cried out, 'Keep your ground, knight,' upon which he immediately said, 'I am willing to waive my shot, to atone for my irregularity.'

"'By no means,' answered Bateman; 'but if Kilgobbin wishes to shorten the distance, let him advance, I have no objection.'

"'No, no,' exclaimed the seconds, 'keep your ground, gentlemen.' The signal was now repeated, the knight fired, and his ball took off one of the breast buttons of Bateman's coat.

"'That was well intended, Kilgobbin,' said Bateman, 'and in your best style.'

"'No,' said the former, 'my hand is out, and I have not my own pistols.'

"Bateman then fired in his turn, his ball passing through the sleeve of Kilgobbin's shirt without touching his arm.

"'Come, that's not bad,' said the knight.

"Some confusion seemed here to arise amongst the crowd, and a horseman appeared at a distance, galloping towards the ground: a cry was heard that the high sheriff of the county was coming.

"By Jupiter! exclaimed his brother, who was present, "that is impossible, for I left him in bed yesterday, having been wounded in a duel, the day before, with the clerk of the peace." It was now discovered that the horseman was Kilgobbin's groom, with his master's favorite pistols, which had been sent for to a considerable distance, and had not arrived in time. The knight seemed much pleased to get them, and requested to have them loaded instead of those he used.

"Bateman's second objected to any change of pistols, unless his principal were allowed to take his choice of one of them.

"Kilgobbin agreed to this, but Bateman refused, saying gaily, he was too good a carpenter to find fault with his tools. They now resumed their stations, and the knight having received one of his favorite weapons, was called on to fire, which he did, with more deliberation and effect than before. Bateman was seen to stagger back a few paces, and drop on one knee, his pistol, in the effort to recover himself, fell from his hand, and exploded, but without doing any mischief.—He was, however, immediately on his ground again, declaring he was but slightly hurt, and calling for another pistol.

"The seconds now interfered, asserting that enough had been done to satisfy the honor of both parties, and the spectators eagerly joined in their opinion, crying out, 'No more, no more gentlemen."

"Kilgobbin, observing the general sentiment, said, 'he had no objection now to accept a proper apology!'

"'What do you say, Mr. Bateman,' asked young French, who seemed particularly anxious to put an end to the affair.

"'I say, sir,' steadily replied Bateman, 'that I am not a man to make an apology at the muzzle of a pistol on any occasion; but, in the present instance, to offer an apology would be to sanction in temperance, and acknowledge an accident to be an offence. I am here to satisfy the Knight of Kilgobbin, but not to humor him.' * * *

At this moment, up comes the King of the Curragh, as he was called, old Sir Toby Tuite, whose word, for half a century, was considered in that part of the country, as the law and the gospel in all matters of duelling, horse-racing, and cock fighting. As he was acquainted with the case, the seconds appealed to him, and a general silence took place immediately, to hear the veteran's decision, which he delivered with great solemnity.

"'Gentlemen,' said he, 'a blow is the greatest indignity which can be put upon a man of honor and feeling. My friend Kilgobbin has received one in public, under circumstances which might reasonably make a man of high spirit very reluctant to admit the excuse of accident, even when he had himself no doubt on the subject. We must not allow our personal dignity to be tainted by even a conjectural violation,' ('Hear him, hear him!' said the Knight.) 'Kilgobbin is justified, therefore, in the course which he has adopted. As blood has been drawn in the field, he is also at liberty to receive an apology if he chooses so to do; but as an apology has been refused by my friend Bateman, Kilgobbin is authorized by the strict laws of honor to proceed.'

"'Who ever questioned it?' interposed Kilgobbin; polishing, with his shirt sleeve, the barrel of his pistol.

"'I say, gentlemen, he has a right to proceed as long as his antagonist stands before him—until one or the other is disabled.'

"'A second Daniel!' exclaimed the knight exultingly; 'a second Daniel!'

"'Yes, gentlemen,' continued Sir Toby, 'though the offence must be considered to have been originally improbable—though it was, in the first instance, disclaimed, and has been here sufficiently atoned for, yet, strictly speaking, Kilgobbin may insist upon proceeding to the last extremity. He has a right to demand the pound of flesh—it is in the bond—but, by the cross of St. Patrick!' continued the old man, raising his clenched hand, 'he is a Jew, if in this case he exacts it.' * * *

"While the seconds retired to their posts, Kilgobbin, who felt his confidence in his own powers restored, by getting his favorite pistols, cried out, 'Now, Bateman, mind what you are about—I have got my own tools, and by G—d! I'll bring you down the next shot.'

"Bateman, bowing slightly, replied, 'I thank you, sir, for the warning.'

"The word was then given. Bateman fired and his antagonist dropped as if he had been struck by a thunderbolt.

"Bateman exclaimed, 'Good God! I have killed him.'

"We all ran up to Kilboggin----his second raised him a little from the ground—he opened his eyes, looked round him, and seeing his adversary near him, faintly said, 'Give me your hand, Bateman----you are not to blame for this---God bless you!' he never spoke again.

"He had been hit under the right breast, and the ball lodged in the spine.

"Poor Bateman, dreadfully shocked, fell to the earth, through weakness from loss of blood, and was obliged to be carried off the ground. He was afterwards tried, and honorably acquitted.

Immense Steam Vessel.—The Government of the Netherlands has ordered the immediate construction of a larger steamvess l than has hitherto swam the ocean.—It is to be 350 feet in length and to have three decks, four masts, and a bowsprit, and a steam engine power equal to 300 horses, and is to cost 800,000 Dutch florins. This enormous vessel is to draw but sixteen feet water when laden, and ten feet unladen. The object of the Government is to facilitate the intercourse between Holland and the Dutch East Indies, and it is calculated that about forty days will be sufficient for the voyage, which may be effected with the consumption of about 2,400,000 pounds of mineral coal.

Foreign News.

From the New York American, Oct. 12.

LATE FROM EUROPE.

The arrival of the Birmingham from Liverpool, furnishes London papers to the 8th ult. They do not confirm the rumored occupation of Constantinople by the Russians, nor even the battle said to have been fought at Kirk Kilissa. On the contrary, it would seem Count Diebitsch had hesitated to advance, possibly from a desire to intercept the Grand Vizier, who had left Choumla with most of his troops, and was manœuvring through the passes of the Little Balkan, in order to throw himself into Adrianople.—The force under Count Diebitsch is variously stated, at from 35 to 60,000 men—the largest of these numbers strike us as hardly sufficient to authorize a direct march upon Constantinople.—Meanwhile it is again said that the Sultan feels himself compelled to treat for peace, and that, in that view, two commissioners had been despatched to the Russian headquarters. The Paris Constitutionnel of the 5th, gives the following conditions as those that will be insisted upon by Russia:—

From the Constitutionnel of September 5th.

FRANKFORT, AUGUST 26.—The Emperor of Russia requires outlets for his commerce, securities, and guarantees; he demands the cession of the fortresses on the Phasis, the entire cession of Armenia as far as Erzeroum, the port of Trebisond, and the occupation of those of Sinope and Samsoun, as a security. He requires that the fortresses of Rudschuck and Choumla shall be delivered up. Lastly, his armies shall occupy Adrianople, the castle of Fanaraki, situated at the entrance of the Bosphorus towards the Black Sea, Gallipoli on the Hellespent, and the castle of the Dardanelles on the European side. He requires the expenses of the war, and the possession of the whole south side of the Balkan, till the contributions imposed on the Turks be paid. As for the affairs of Greece, the complete emancipation not only of Hellas but of something more will be demanded. This being laid down, with many other conditions, the Sultan will reign on the one side as far as Ponte Piccolo, and on the other to Fanaraki, till it shall be time to give to him, as happened to the last Khan of the Crimea, an estate and an honorable pension, with right of having a mosque in the environs of St. Petersburgh. This contingency will be realized in four or five years at the latest.

Let us fancy the two Ambassadors, who are on the point of proceeding to the head quarters of General Diebitsch to negociate in the name of the Sultan, coming back to his Sublimity with such proposals. Nobody would like to be in their place with respect to the part which they are called upon to act. In fact, they have not been able to obtain any thing of the Divan but humiliation; and the Russian bayonets, tearing the British protocol, will exact a peace signed by a Sovereign enclosed in the circle of Popilius.

The London Courier of the 7th September, in publishing the above, thus comments upon it:—

We have quoted it, not to confirm its assertions, but to say, on the contrary, that they are entitled to no credit. However great the successes of the Russians have been, they give them no claims to demands which would leave the existence of the Turkish monarchy in Europe entirely at their mercy. Neither, even were those successes still greater, and Constantinople itself in the possession of his troops, do we think that the Emperor Nicholas would so far depart from his promises of moderation as to think of imposing such unreasonable terms. That he will ask more than would have satisfied him had the Turks consented to treat at the close of the first campaign, or before the passage of the Balkan, it is natural to expect; and that he may do so without ceasing to be moderate it is impossible to deny. For the question of moderation is a question of degree, and must be viewed as such by all who look impartially at the subject. But though he may raise his terms, his conduct hitherto has been such as to strengthen the belief that he will continue to be guided, even in that rise, by the great and honorable principle which he adopted at the outset. The prolongation of the war, to which, after every important advantage gained by his armies, he offered to put an end, having forced additional expenses upon him, there would be nothing surprising or unjust if he should claim a larger indemnity than he originally proposed. Whether he would afterwards commute that indemnity, if solicited, and as a matter of accommodation to the exhausted treasury of the Porte, into increased facilities for his maritime trade or the possession of certain ports and fortresses in Asia, is a question for future consideration, though our impression is in favor of the affirmative. But that he would, under any circumstances, ask for an increase of territory in Europe, or for the temporary occupation of Adrianople or the forts of the Bosphorus, is, we have strong reason to believe, a contingency which need not be apprehended.

The same paper contradicts the rumor that the Sultan had acceded to the treaty of the 6th July. Upon the whole, the intelligence by this ship is less decisive than was anticipated.

As to the crops in Great Britain—the next important topic for us, the fair weather of the week or ten days preceding the departure of the Birmingham, had relieved most of the anxiety in regard to the harvest, and the crop would, it was calculated, turn out an average one. Prices of wheat and of American flour, both in bond and free, had declined.

Three line of battle ships, the Britannia, Glocester, and Melville, were about to sail from Portsmouth for the Mediterranean—this, however, is not such a reinforcement as denotes any apprehension of hostilities.

Hostilities have been renewed in Java.

An Austrian force has been defeated in attempting a landing at Salee, Morocco.

Mr. Barbour, our late Minister to England, had engaged passage for himself and his family in the ship Britannia, of Oct. 1.

The Prussian State Gazette has brought us some official details from General Diebitsch, by which it appears that on 9th ult. he had not yet quitted his camp at Aidos, and that his advanced posts, instead of having reached Kirk-Kilissa, had not proceeded beyond Faki, which is only half way to that place. It is evident from other accounts that his hesitation was occasioned by the movements of the Grand Vizier, who had certainly quitted Chomlua, and was manœuvring through the passes of the Little Balkan, to gain Selimno and return to Adrianople. Meanwhile, the people of the country submitted quietly to the Russians, and gave up their arms. In Asia, Gen. Paskewitsch had sent out two expeditions, one to the fortress of Choriss on his left, and the other to Baibourdi on his right, a fortified town nearly half way to Trebisond; both of which had proved successful.—Courier, 7th.

From the Messenger des Chambres.

Belgrade, Aug. 17.—The Pacha has just received a courier from Adrianople, with the important news that the Grand Vizier, with part of his troops had quitted Choumla, and that, having taken the road to Karnabat, he has happily arrived at Adrianople, to take the defence of that city. He had left Hussein Pacha to command at Choumla. This news has spread joy among the Turks.

As the last Russian accounts, which came from Aidos by way of Bucharest, announced an action at Karnabat between the Russians and 10,000 Turks, it is very probable that the Grand Vizier was present at that engagement.

Accounts from Ceres, of the 2d of Aug. say that the Sultan's firman, calling all the people to arms, had been read in the mosques. On the 1st of August 5000 men were already on their march to Adrianople, but this enthusiasm had not been general; for some letters announce, that in one of the mosques, the reading of the firman had excited murmurs.—Nuremburg Corresp.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Despatches were received this morning at the Foreign Office, from the Hon. Robert Gordon, dated Constantinople, August 12, four days later than the former; and from Lord Cowley, at Vienna, dated August 27.

At the time when the courier quitted Constantinople, notwithstanding the assertions of the French papers, it appears that nothing had yet been definitively settled respecting the Greek Question; but the negociations were still going on. Great exertions were making to raise new levies of troops, but they had not been attended with much success, and it was not expected that Adrianople could resist the attack of the Russian army, although it was believed that General Diebitsch could not bring more than 35,000 troops against it. That Commander was understood to have stopped his advance, in order to endeavor to intercept the Grand Vizier before his arrival at Adrianople, having heard that he had quitted Choumla for that city. As late ar the 12th ult. no negociator had been sent from Constantinople to the Russian head quarters.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—We have seen letters from Berlin of the 29th of August, in which it is said, according to the latest news from the seat of war, the Russians were advancing in two columns—one upon Adrianople, and the other upon Constantinople, by way of Kirk-Killissa. These letters farther state that the Sultan had actually appointed two Commissioners to treat with the Russians, and so confident were the dealers in Stock that peace would be the consequence, that the funds had risen in Berlin 1 per cent.—Morn. Herald.

The Harvest.—The London papers of the 4th state that the fine weather which had prevailed for several days, must remove all apprehensions for the safety of the remaining part of the harvest. The Courier says it is still posssible that the crop may fulfil its early promise, and prove more than an average one. In Ireland the weather had become settled, and the harvest had been brought to a successful conclusion. The potato crop held forth the most cheering prospect.

We believe we may now confidently state that the crops, notwithstanding the recent rains, are nearly all carried, and that the harvest will, contrary to the general expectation which prevailed a fortnight ago, be most abundant throughout the United Kingdom. Speculation in the prime article of human subsisteuce has been checked by the excellence of the crops. The price of wheat is falling at all the markets; and there is every prospect of bread being cheap throughout the country. The abundance of the harvest will have a beneficial influence in ameliorating the state of the country, and will materially tend to promote the improvement which is taking place in the markets for produce generally. Liverpool Albion of 7th September.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

By the packet ship Birmingham, Capt. Harris, we have London dates to the 8th, and Liverpool to 10th September, both inclusive, with Lists and Price Current. We have perused these Journals with attention, and are now satisfied, that the account hitherto published of the disposition of the Sultan to treat for peace on the terms proposed by Allies, are false; nor do we believe in the reported consternation of the Turks, either in Europe or Asia, or that the Jannissaries have created disaffection, and delivered up place after place to the Russians as reported. The latest advices received in London from the British Ambassador, at the Porte, were of the 12th August, at which time General Diebitsch was still in Aidos. Rumors were afloat originating in the German papers, that this General had entered Adrianople, and another account published in the Augsburgh Gazette was that Shumla had offered to capitulate. These and other rumors published in the German papers, which pretend to accounts of the 10th from Constantinople are pronounced by the French Journals, which contain letters from Constantinople of the same date, to be so many fables. The latter say, that so far from there being any truth in these accounts, the Sultan had sent off 10,000 men to Kirk-Kilissa, to reinforce Adin Ahman Pacha, and to enable him to repel General Diebitsch; and it is added that the accounts given of the further approach of the Russians—of the ill state of things in the Capital of Turkey—of the disposition of the Sultan for peace, are among the fables.

So far from Trebisond having been taken by the Russians, an article dated Constautinople, 9th August, is published in a St. Petersburgh paper of 2d September, in which it is stated that a division of the Russian fleet had bombarded Trebisond and thrown about 12000 balls into it—that 1500 men landed and were repulsed with the loss of five hundred, and were forced to re-embark—and that they then stood to the eastward.

It seems certain that there had been some fighting after the advance of the Russians to Aidos, and that General Geismar had been beaten by the Pacha of Scutari; the former is said to have abandoned Rachova; some accounts state, that he first set it on fire, and destroyed all the munitions of war and provisions. The garrison of Choumla had it was said, made a sally on the 27th July, by which 2000 Russians were killed, and their positions completely deranged. General Krassowsky, who commanded the Russians, had retired to Jeni Bazaar. On the 30th, General Scheremelieff encountered 15000 Turks, Cavalry, and Infantry, under the walls of Jambeul, the former commanded by Halib Pacha, who furiously attacked the Russians, but were constantly repulsed with great loss to the Turks—so says an extra supplement to the Journal of St. Petersburgh.

Notwithstanding the accounts about the cooping up of the Grand Vizier in Choumla, it was said he had arrived at Adrianople! We forbear further extracts and comment, except to say, that the Sultan appears to be resolute as ever, and, that down to the latest hour, there was no attempt on his part, to negociate with the Russians. Some of the English Journals begin to speak of the war as one of aggression on the part of Russia. The Grand Duke Constantine is said to have been forbidden the Russian territories by his brother Nicholas, in consequence of his tyranny towards the Poles.

The Courrier de Smyrne contains long letters from Greece in which the Greeks are represented as unable to comprehend liberty or order, and very slow in repairing any of the devastations of their long War. We find in that paper, statements from Constantinople, which show a deep persuasion on the part of the Turks that the Allies would never suffer a dismemberment of the Turkish empire, but avail themselves of this occasion to secure its integrity by treaty.

The Russian empire extends over 368,000 square geographical miles of 15 to a degree, (being upwards of four times as long as an English statute mile, 69 of which go to a degree,) 100,000 miles in Europe, more than 243,000 miles in Asia, and the residue in America. This empire comprehends one-half of Europe, and one-third of Asia; it forms the ninth part of the habitable globe. Its European division is peopled by fifty-eight millions of inhabitants, its Asiatic by two millions and its American by 50,000. The total number is sixty millions of souls, which, however, gives no more than 161 persons to each square mile, In this population, and in Europe alone, we perceive two million, five hundred thousand Finns, less than five hundred thousand Germans and Scandinavians, and fifty millions of Slavonians, of whom four millions are Poles. The Russian territory is considered capable of supporting one hundred and fifty millions of human beings, and its population to increase at a yearly rate of half a million.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Egypt.—"There are seven learned Frenchmen here, who have been sent by the French government, with the charge of translating and illustrating the hieroglyphics. Their head is the renowned Champollion, who reads the hieroglyphics with as much readiness as his native language, and states that he finds all in the hieroglyphics that the Bible relates of Egypt. I have often seen these gentlemen, and hope to meet them in Cairo."

ON RICE.

Rice is my favorite food. I have been glad to see that you recommend it for more general use; but sorry that you recommend also the insipid mode of boiling and steaming it without salt or condiments, practised in Carolina, and borrowed from the negroes. I contend that they do not know how to cook rice well in Carolina, and I defy the whole host of Carolinians to prove that their rice is palpable. They might as well say that bread ought to be made without salt or yeast.

I wish also that this wholesome and cheap food was more generally consumed. One pound of rice is said to satisfy our appetites as much as two pounds of meat; because it swell and absorbs the water, forming with it a nutritive jelly. But this food, to become more common and liked, ought to be well seasoned and cooked. Why apply to the negro food of Carolina for our guide? Let us rather apply to the Chinese, Hindoos, Turks, Egyptians, &c. or the four hundred millions of human beings who, from time immemorial, have made it their staple food. We shall find that they can make 150 dishes with it, every one of them better than steamed rice, and chiefly many kinds of pillau or stews, pudding and soups.

It is not my wish to prescribe the Hindoo condiments of black, white and red pepper, cinnamon, ginger, and other spices, because they are not to my taste. They are too strong, heat the blood, and make thirsty: but either salt, sugar or butter, is always indispensable; and they must be boiled with the rice, not added afterwards.

A pillau, the standing dish of the Asiatic, is rice boiled dry with meat or fowls. Butter is then useless, but salt, saffron, pimento, tomatos, onions, celery, &c. may be added at pleasure, while boiling, to give a better flavor.—Fifty kinds of pillaus can thus be made with beef, veal, mutton, lamb, game, fowl, oysters, clams, fish, &c.

The butter pillau is to be made with butter instead of meat.—Two ounces of butter for every pound of rice, boiled together; or the butter may be added when the rice begins to swell.

The rice puddings differ from the pillaus, by using sugar instead of salt. The best are made with milk, or half milk and half water; the condiments are butter, eggs, lemon peel, raisins, pimento, &c.

The rice soups differ from either by being liquid, or the broth, milk, &c. preponderating. The French can make 25 kinds of excellent soups with rice by adding thereto cabbage, onions, celery, tomatos, lentils, peas, beans, oysters, fish, &c.—Onions and butter make a very good substitute for broth. Salt must always be put in while boiling. Sugar must be used instead when milk is added, or is any way employed.

These are my favorite dishes, and dainty ones they are; while the whole cost of them to feed a family, or mess of six persons, is only 20 cents including 3 lbs. of rice, with salt, sugar, butter, milk or broth, as may be preferred; and so many different dishes can be made, that the same need not appear but once a month on the table, if you like variety. Now this, in my opinion, is the best way to make rice still more relished and consumed.

THE ACCELERATING

WASHER.

THE subscriber is proprietor of a Washing Machine, the utility and economy of which are now perfectly established: and having received the most satisfactory recommendations in its favor, from many families in the city, who have tested its advantage by actual experiment, he offers it with great confidence to his friends and the public. The machine is so simple in its construction that a child of twelve years of age may wash with it: is made light and portable: is cheap, and is adapted alike to the use of large or small families.

The following ladies have testified their approbation of this machine, and have kindly permitted the proprietor to refer to them for a recommendation in its favor.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 20, 1829.

Laughable.—The Butler Repository received last evening contains a calculation which elects Mr. Wolf by precisely 49,060 votes.

The election returns, the mass of foreign news, and the valuable article upon the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, prevent us from giving to our paper this day, so much variety as we wish. The abovementioned are however highly interesting, and will no doubt by their importance supply the place of various matters.

At a meeting of the bar, in attendance at the District Court of the United States, held at Williamsport, on the 6th instant, Francis G. Campbell, of Lycoming, in the Chair, and W. W. Potter of Centre, Secretary, the following resolutions were adopted.

Resolved, That the members of this meeting entertain the highest respect for the Honorable WILLIAM WILKINS, Judge of the United States Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, whose demeanor has been uniformly marked by mildness, dignity and urbanity, and whose official conduct has been characterized by the utmost impartiality, perfect integrity and distinguished legal ability.

Resolved, That we should much regret a final determination on his part to relinquish his present station, which he has filled with so much honor to himself and usefulness to the public, that we earnestly desire a continuance of his judicial labors, especially from the consideration, that much important business has been commenced in this court which remains unfinished, and in such a state as to occasion delay and public inconvenience by his resignation.

Resolved, That ROBERT C. GRIER, of Columbia County, W. COX ELLIS, of Lycoming county and JAMES HEPBURN, of Northumberland county, Esquires, be a committee to present to his Honor a copy of these proceedings duly attested, and to procure their publication.

WILLIAMSPORT, Oct. 7, 1829.

SIR—On behalf of a meeting of the bar, in attendance at the October session, of the District court of the United States, for the Western District of Pennsylvania, the undersigned committee appointed for that purpose, have the honor to present the enclosed minutes of their proceedings, and beg leave to repeat their individual concurrence in the sentiments therein expressed.

We are sir, with great respect,
Your obedient servants,
ROBERT C. GRIER,
W. COX ELLIS,
JAMES HEPBURN,
Committee.

To the Hon. WM. WILKINS, Esq.
Judge of the Dis't Ct. of the U. S.
for the Western Dis't of Penna.

WILLIAMSPORT, Oct 7, 1829.

Gentlemen,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of to day, covering the minutes of the proceedings of the gentlemen of the bar, in attendance at the present session of the court of the United States, for the western district of Pennsylvania.

I am incapable of expressing upon paper the very deep degree of sensibility, with which I have received this kind and most flattering communication.

The resolutions which the gentlemen of your meeting have been pleased to pass, expressive of their opinion of my official deportment, call from me the most sincere thanks, and the expression of the purest gratitude.—I am sensible that I have no right to claim, at your hands, such marked attention. I could never pretend to go further, than to ask that approval which should always be conferred upon good intentions, and disinterested devotion to the fair administration of justice to the suitors of a court.

Your approbation is of peculiar worth to me, because it comes from those whose private and professional characters command my highest respect, and whose pursuits, and connection with the bench, give them every opportunity of detecting what is error, and whose generous minds would always induce them to sanction what is right. And in the present instance, you give evidence of that which is not only estimable to the Judge, but of great value in the administration of the law, harmony and confidence between the bench and the bar.

The gentlemen of the meeting have been so kind as to go further, and say how much they would regret a final determination, on my part to relinquish my present station and to desire a continuance of my judicial labors.

If I am not compelled by a public and imperative duty, I am free to confess, that I have at this moment, no wish to separate myself from those, who, in so flattering a manner, desire a continuance of our present connexion—and the very manner in which you desire that continuance has a strong tendency to shake the purpose which I have had in view, and to inspire me with confidence and encouragement, to retain the station I have now the honor to hold.

I am firmly and affectionately attached to the good people and the congressional district in which I reside, and their wishes and interests prescribe to me a rule of conduct difficult to be resisted. This, together with other considerations of a private nature, place me in a delicate and embarrassing situation; and I am sure you will, therefore, pardon me when I say to you, that I cannot at the present moment give a positive answer to your communication, but must postpone my final determination as to my future course until my return to my home. And, I pray you gentlemen, to be assured, that let my course be what it may, I shall never cease to esteem you and the gentleman on whose behalf you are a committee, nor to cherish the most grateful and lively recollection of the incidents of your meeting, and the courteous manner in which you have been pleased to make them known to me.

Accept for yourselves and those whom you represent assurances of my esteem and attachment.

WM. WILKINS.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

An opinion seems to be entertained, that the value of that part of the canal which extends westwardly from Cumberland, will arise, almost wholly, from its connexion with the Ohio river. It is supposed that the intermediate resources of navigation are so few, and so small in value, as not to deserve much attention. Hence the resolution, which is reported to have been passed by the board of managers, for reducing the dimensions of the canal from Cumberland to the Ohio: so that instead of sixty feet width, it will have but forty-eight, and a depth in proportion. The opinion that the tonnage employed on the canal will accumulate as you approach tide water, is plausible: yet a reference to those subjects of commerce which will be brought within the range of its influence, will convince any one that this accumulation is greatly overrated. Indeed, I am inclined to believe, that between Pittsburgh and the mountains, the commerce of the canal will be more active and more valuable to the stockholders than that of any other division of the whole line. This belief is supported by considerations which, to my mind, are entirely satisfactory. The object of this communication is to place before the public such facts and suggestions as may induce farther inquiries, and more accurate results respecting this matter. The commerce between the western states and the sea board, which requires the use of the whole line, must, of course, employ every part of the canal equally. Limiting our views to this commerce, no reason can be assigned for a greater width or depth in one place than in another; and it may be fairly said, that if forty-eight feet will afford a sufficiently easy passage on this side of the mountains, it will do the same on the other. But it is certain that a breadth of sixty feet yields an easier navigation, and has advantages which, with a brisk commerce, will much more than countervail the additional expense of making it. In a work of such magnitude, which is expected to endure through all time, not only as a commercial highway, whose use and value will improve with the growth of the country, but as a ligament and bond of union between the eastern and western states, it would seem to me that we should aim at the highest attainable perfection in the first instance. But suppose the commerce between those states should not be sufficient in amount to justify the making of so large a canal, but that it might be accommodated by one twelve feet narrower; the question will then remain, whether the division from Cumberland eastward will have an accession of trade so much greater than that of the western division, as to require a canal of larger dimensions. It is expected that the coal trade alone, between Cumberland and the seaboard, will employ many boats, and yield a handsome revenue to the company. No reason is perceived for supposing this advantage to be overrated. But this article will, I presume, constitute nine-tenths of the local tonnage on the eastern division of the canal. The territory from Cumberland to Washington city, is to a considerable degree mountainous and sterile, and with the exception of the valley west of the Blue Ridge, has few resources which add to the value of a canal. That the navigation of this section will be swelled with the bulky produce shipped from the western states, is very true, and that its breadth and depth will not be found more than adequate to the ready and convenient transit of the boats employed in this trade and in the local commerce referred to, appears, to my mind, equally certain. But a glance at the condition and resources of western Pennsylvania, will shew us that our local commerce cannot be less, and will in all probability be greater, than from Cumberland to tide water. The territory lying between the head of the Ohio and the mountains, and divided by the Youghiogheny river, is one whose resources are no where exceeded. It is the favorite region of the locust and black walnut, two descriptions of timber which are annually acquiring an increased value, and the former of which enters largely into the construction of steamboats. The oak, ash, and cherry, and other valuable species, which abound in the neighborhood of the Youghiogheny, will be floated from a great distance to our market, and forests which were before of little account, will contribute to the profits of the canal and to the general wealth of the country. The territory in question is exceedingly fertile, well cultivated, and admirably adapted to the growth of those cumbrous articles which are most profitable in the neighborhood of cities, but which will not bear a distant transportation by land. It abounds in freestone of almost every description, adapted to building, to grinding, &c. The canal will pass by the side of strata extending many miles in length. Grindstones quarried in this region have been sent over-land to Philadelphia and Baltimore, and must, before many years, form no inconsiderable item in the exports of western Pennsylvania. The demand for stone for building and other purposes, in a rapidly growing city, will be far greater than is generally apprehended, and the quarries which border on the canals, made or to be made, are amongst the extraordinary and pre-eminent advantages which this city possesses beyond almost any other position on the globe. The people of Boston have connected the granite quarries of Quincy with their city by a rail road. The heavy expense incurred in this work was justified, in their opinion, by the demand for stone applicable to the single purpose of building.

The greater part of the lime used in Pittsburgh is brought from a distance of seven to thirteen miles. The quantity consumed cannot be subjected to any precise calculation. It is, however, enormous, and the demand will continue to be progressively enhanced for many years to come, if not for centuries. The most extensive beds of limestone in this section of Pennsylvania, are found immediately on the line of the national canal. From Turtle Creek to the confluence of Jacob's Creek with the Youghiogheny, and, it is believed, for fifteen or twenty miles above, limestone, in exhaustless abundance, appears on the river hills, and might, in numerous places, be discharged from the kiln directly into the boats employed in conveying it to market. The lime used in building our penitentiary was burnt on the hill beyond Turtle Creek, thirteen miles from Pittsburgh. It was preferred on account of its superior quality. In the event of a canal being opened through the limestone country between Pittsburgh and Connellsville, the trade in this article will not only be sensibly felt in the revenue of the company, but we shall be connected by a great navigable highway with the mineral region of Fayette and Somerset counties, whose remoteness from Pittsburgh has of late excluded it in a great measure from the competition of our market. Its rich mines of iron ore, which, owing to this cause, cannot now be worked to advantage, will yield their exuberant treasures to swell the tonnage of the canal. To the article of iron we may add that of coal. The stratum of this mineral which lies on the margin of the Youghiogheny river, is in many places seven feet in thickness, and may be thrown directly from the pits into the canal.—Even at the present prices, it would bear a transportation twenty-five or thirty miles. This is demonstrated from the fact that the coal trade has already commenced on the Pennsylvania canal, and the mines of the Messrs. Peterson, from a distance of eighteen miles, contribute largely to the consumption of Allegheny town. When, in addition to the facilities abovementioned, the coal shall be floated into our artificial harbors, in boats which will lie almost on a level with the pavements of our streets, the competetion of wagons and teams employed in the nearest vicinity of our coal-pits will not be able to exclude it from our market. Coal is now reckoned amongst our exports, and the markets to the west of us will extend and multiply in a ratio proportioned to the growth of the cities and towns on the Ohio and Mississippi. The coal trade down the Ohio will at no distant period become lucrative, and will be found to be intimately connected with the mines on the national canal.

The present condition and probable growth of this city must not be overlooked in our speculations upon the local trade in question. The produce which enters into the subsistence of its population; the brick, stone, and lime necessary for buildings and for ships; the iron for our manufactories, the coal which they will consume, and which must constitute the fuel of private families: all these will have a progressive augmentation in quantity, commensurate with the advancement of our city. We are but just beginning to understand the peculiarity of our situation—to find that, in nearly all those resources which attract human enterprise, which diversify its pursuits, which enlarge its powers and guarantee its indefinite expansion, Pittsburgh has a decided superiority over any other position in the interior of our continent. It is exceeded in this respect by very few of those which are maritime. Estimating the average annual increase of our population at two thousand, which probably falls short of the true ratio, the number of inhabitants at the head of the Ohio, will not be less than sixty thousand at the end of the next twenty years. It is surely no extravagant request that men, to whose judgment is confided the location and dimensions of the stupendous work under consideration, should permit their speculations to range a fifth part of a century in advance. They cannot but foresee that, with the advantages and inducements which have been indicated, the commerce of a strictly local character, between Pittsburgh and the mountains, must, in a few years, be immense. This commerce, while it will be a distinct accession to the prosperity of our city, cannot be affected by any rivalship. The products which will enter into it must be forever in demand, and forever reciprocated between the city and the country. Some idea may be formed of the probable revenue of the canal from Pittsburgh thro' the valley of the Youghiogheny, and terminating at the mountains, from the example of the canal at Cincinnati. It extends northwardly sixty or seventy miles through a rich agricultural country, and terminates at Dayton. Its commerce may be said to be local, being supplied by the country which it intersects, or which lies within range of its northern termination. Yet this canal has a busy and profitable trade, yielding, as we are told, six per cent. upon its original cost. And the revenue will increase from year to year with the improvement of the circumjacent country. Considering the great variety and immense aggregate of heavy products which must enter into the local trade of the western division of the national canal, I think it very clear that this trade alone will produce a revenue equal to six per cent. on the cost of the work. It seems to me, therefore, that every argument which recommends the established dimensions of this canal east of the mountains, is decisive in favor of equal dimensions until it reaches the Ohio. The stockholders may rest assured that it will, even there, be small enough for the trade attracted to it. They must bear in mind that they are opening a highway for the transit of the produce of a vast, fertile, and rapidly improving territory. The whole valley of the Ohio, embracing five large states, sufficient in area and resources for the support of fifteen millions of people, will be forever tributary to this great work. One half of the produce of this immense region, must, in conjunction with our local commerce, give full employment to all the artificial navigation which can be connected with this river. It is the shortest, the easiest, the safest route to the Atlantic sea-board. Having in view this boundless trade, it is earnestly hoped that its accommodation is not to be embarrassed by a canal of stinted dimensions, through a territory which promises a greater accession of local trade than any other between the Chesapeake and Ohio.

CLINTON.

TOTAL DEFEAT OF THE SPANISH INVADING EXPEDITION.

The Cincinnati Daily Advertiser of the 3d instant, announces the receipt of a letter in that place, dated Sabine, September 7th, which states that the Spanish invading force had been totally defeated, with the loss of their baggage, cannon and money. A few only escaped to sea, the remainder were slain.

Some of the disaffected old Spaniards, who were approaching to join the invaders, had also fallen into the hands of the Mexicans with their money. All was quiet in Texas.

The Broadway Marble House, No. 441, which is 25 feet wide by 40 deep, with brick walls 12 inches thick, front and rear, and side walls 8 inches thick, has been raised from the ground, chimneys and all to the height of several feet, in order to substitute another story. It is done by means of screws, under the direction of Mr. Simeon Brown. The process is so simple, and so slightly disturbs the building, that a family might remain in it pursuing their usual avocations, with perfect composure. The weight of such a building is enormous; and the ease with which it is raised, furnishes an admirable illustration of the power of mechanism.

PENNSYLVANIA, ss.
In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

By J. ANDREW SHULZE, Governor of the said Commonwealth.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, by an act of the General Assembly of this Commonwhealth, passed the twenty-second day of April last, entitled, An act "relative to the Pennsylvania Canal and Rail Road," the Governor is authorised to borrow on the credit of the Commonwealth, two millions and two hundred thousand dollars, to be expended in the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal and Rail Road, and to be reimbursed at any time after twenty-five years, from the first day of December next. And whereas, by the same act the Governor is authorized to negociate temporary loans, for such sums as should be necessary previous to the negociation of the permanent loan, to be repaid out of the permanent loan aforesaid, within six months from the passage of said Act, and the failure to obtain on permanent loan the sums required, having made it necessary to obtain on temporary loan a large portion of the sum authorized to be borrowed, which temporary loans, agreeably to the provisions of the said act, will become payable on the twenty-second day of this month, and the Commissioner of Loans having reported to me that only a part of the permanent loan has been obtained, and it appearing to be very improbable that the residue will be obtained in time to meet the engagements relative to the re-payment of the temporary loans, I have deemed it expedient to convene the General Assembly, with as little delay as possible, to the intent, that on this extraordinary occasion the Legislature may have an opportunity, at an early day, of adopting such measures as shall be thought necessary to the fulfilment of the engagements which have been entered into on the part of the state under the sanction of its laws.

Therefore, and by virtue of the authority to me in such cases given, in and by the Constitution of the Commonwealth, I have issued this proclamation hereby convening the General Assembly to hold a session on Tuesday, the third day of November next, at the Capitol, at Harrisburgh; and of which time and place of convening, all persons therein concerned are required to take notice.

GIVEN under my hand and the Great Seal of the State at Harrisburgh, this fifteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, and of the Commonwealth the fifty-fourth. By the Governor.

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

MR. E. E. AARON

HAS the honor respectfully to inform the public of Pittsburgh and its vicinity, that he has just arrived in this city, and is the bearer of the celebrated and invaluable LOADSTONE FILES for the radical cure of warts and corns on the feet.

This instrument is sanctioned by the most eminent Medical men on the Continent, invented by the celebrated Dr. Weller, physician to the King of Sweden. This highly approved of instrument consists of a chemical preparation from a mineral substance, found in the Alps of Switzerland, with which any one can remove, with ease and safety, the most inveterate corn, by the simple process of a slight rubbing, according to the directions, which will afford instantaneous relief to sufferers, however great may be their pains, and supersede the necessity of cutting. Its construction is of a nature that no fear need be apprehended for the surrounding flesh, but may be freely used on the softest skin, without ever feeling the slightest pain or inconvenience.

If Mr. Aaron was the possessor of the files only, he could not warrant the cure, but as it has never failed to effect a cure, wherever it has been tried, by being applied according to the directions, it may be warranted with the utmost confidence.

As Mr. Aaron's stay in this city will be limited, he has appointed Messrs. Avery & Co. corners of Wood and Second, and Market and Fourth streets, his general agents, and empowered them to treat with other persons desirous of vending the same, who will be supplied by the agents, free of postage. Price of each file, 50 cts.; $4 per dozen, and $42 per gross.

October 16, 1829.—w3mo.

Poetry.

From the Crawford Messenger.

THE ANCIENT FORT.

The circular ditches, found in the western states, are the remains of ancient fortifications, made by the aborigines of the country.

See, on this eminence once rose a fort,
Which was perhaps an ancient chieftain's court,
Where chevaliers retired for martial sport;
Where war and dread
The ruin spread,
By some ambitious chieftain led.

Who were those beings---in what nation born,
Who wander'd hither in creation's morn,
Implanting wonders thro' the wilds forlorn?
No work of fame
Can show a name,
Or how they hunt or whence they came.

Since then, arose the lofty pine again,
For ages stood, and has for ages lain,
And now, extended, rotten on the plain;
While hemlocks green
May now be seen,
Where did exist a human scene.

For surely here a warlike mansion stood,
Where dwelt perhaps, the happy, wise and good,
Where now extends the solitary wood;
Where monsters leap,
Where serpents creep,
And where the dismal night-birds keep

Yes, here the wolves raise their nocturnal howl,—
Unnumber'd serpents in the darkness prowl,
And oft, in night, I hear the screaming owl:
A dire retreat,
Where goblins meet,
And raise, in gloom, their ebon seat.

Thus when a lonesome boy, benighted here,
Oft is tormented with a dismal fear
That some dread apparition may appear---
His courage flees
As ev'ry breeze
Low whispers thro' the mourning trees.

Perhaps it is a region of the dead,
Where posts dream, where heroes have their bed,
Where were the tears of pure affection shed:
Now none to weep
Where many sleep,
Low buried in the ruin deep.

WILLOOMY.

TO THE AUTUMN LEAF.

Lone trembling one!
Last of a summer race, wither'd and sear,
And shivering—wherefore art thou lingering here!
Thy work is done.

Thou hast seen all
The summer flowers reposing in their tomb.
And the green leaves, that knew thee in their bloom,
Wither and fall!

Why dost thou cling
So fondly to the rough and sapless tree?
Hath then existence aught like charms for thee,
Thou faded thing!

The voice of Spring,
Which woke thee into being, ne'er again
Will greet thee—nor the gentle summer's rain
New verdue bring.

The zephyr's breath
No more will wake for thee its melody—
But the singing of the blast shall be
The hymn of death.

Yet a few days,
A few faint struggles with the autumn storm,
And the strained eye to catch thy trembling form
In vain may gaze.

Pale autumn leaf!
Thou art an emblem of mortality,
The broken heart, once young and fresh like thee,
Withered by grief;—

Whose hopes are fled,
Whose loved ones all have drooped and died away,
Still clings to life—and lingering loves to stay,
Above the dead!

But list—e'en now,
I hear the gathering of the autumn blast,
It comes---thy frail form trembles---it is past!
And thou art low!

Miscellany.

Marriage.—The following picture is from a newspaper published 70 years ago, of course in the present age of moral and intellectual improvement, the picture is merely an historical curiosity—"nous avons change tout cela:"—If you see a man and a woman, with little or no occasion, often finding fault, and correcting one another in company, you may be sure they are man and wife. If you see a gentleman and lady in the same coach, in profound silence, the the one looking at one side, the other at the other, never imagine they mean any harm to each other—they are already honestly married. If you see a lady accidentally let fall her glove or handkerchief, and a gentleman that is next her kindly telling her of it, that she may take it up—man and wife. If you see a lady presenting a gentleman with something sidewise, at arm's length, with her head turned another way, speaking to him with a look and accent differing from that she uses to others—it is her husband. If you see a man and a woman walking in the fields in a direct line, 20 yards distant from one another, the man strides over a stile, and goes on sans ceremonie, you may swear they are man and wife, without fear of perjury. If you see a lady whose beauty and carriage attract the eyes, and engage the respect of all the company, except a certain gentleman, who speaks to her in rough accent—it is her husband, who married her for love, but now slights her. If you see a gentleman that is courteous, obliging, and good-natured to every body, except a certain female who lives under the same roof with him, to whom he is unreasonably cross and ill-natured—it is his wife. If you see a male and female continualy jarring, checking, and thwarting each other, yet under the kindest appellations imaginable, as my dear, &c.—man and wife.—London British Chronicle, of May 1, 1761.

Mortality of Infants.—M. M. Villerme and Milne Edwards have addressed to the Academy of Sciences of Paris the result of their inquiries into the influence of temperature on the mortality of new-born infants. M. Edwards, sen., had asserted that in animals of warm blood the heat producing faculty is at its lowest point at the period of birth; and that, in general, in the first stage of life it is so feeble, that the temperature of the animal cannot be kept up when it is exposed to powerful causes of cold. M. M. Villerme and Milne Edwards had subjected this proposition to the test of statistical inquiries. They compared the mortality of infants in the north with that in the south of France, and found that it was greatest in the provinces in which the climate is the coldest. Taking the whole of France, and making the comparison between the seasons, they had discovered that it was always in the coldest season in the year that the deaths of children under one year old were most frequent, while from one year old to an advanced age the contrary was the case. The attention of the legislature, and of the ministers of religion, is called to this circumstance, and suggestions are made of the danger incurred from the custom of taking children at too early a period after their birth to the church for baptism, or to the Mayor's office to be registered. in France, in cases of death, the public officer is required to attend at the house; and why, it is asked should not the same practice be observed in the case of birth. London Mag.

GRAY'S GARDENS.

I HAVE laid off a Village on Coal Hill by this name—It is situated one mile south-west from the abutment of the Monongahela Bridge, overlooking the City of Pittsburgh, opposite Grant Street; a new road, at an elevation of 3 1-2 degrees, has been made up the hill, rendering the access to this Village easier than formerly; the Lots are fronting on Washington and Jackson streets 50 feet each, in depth 120 to a 20 feet alley; those Lots on Calhoun and Kirkpatrick streets, are a greater depth; there are three never-failing Springs of water on these Village lots; its high and healthy situation, with rich soil for gardening will make it an agreeable residence. Lot No. 102, I have appropriated for a School-house and place of worship. A plan of the above Village may be seen at Mr. Hart's, Collector of Tolls at the Monongahela Bridge, who is authorised to sell for me; 30 of the Lots already have buildings thereon. The price will be very low and payments easy.

I have laid off 30 Lots of 25 feet in front by 100 in depth, in the Northern Liberties of Pittsburgh, near Dr. Shoenberger's; the lots run between the Turnpike and the Allegheny river, and are laid out on the plan of the Bayardstown lots: a description of the Lots and the prices will be made known at the Hardware Store of Robert H. Gray, Liberty Street, when I may be absent.

I will also sell, at a fair price, two unimproved Lots, each 60 feet in front on Penn street near the point: in all these sales, little money will be required in hand; the purchaser may retain the purchase money 8 or 10 years by paying interest every six months; the titles are unexceptionable; no money will be required until the purchaser is fully satisfied of this fact.
